Below are excerpts of remarks made during the third quarter 2018 earnings call for Ensco plc (“Ensco”) held on October 30, 2018 that discuss the proposed business combination of Ensco and Rowan Companies plc.

Remarks from Earnings Call on October 30, 2018

Nick Georgas

...In connection with our planned merger with Rowan, Ensco and Rowan have filed a preliminary joint proxy statement with the SEC. Investors are advised to carefully read the preliminary proxy statement because it contains important information about the transaction, the parties, and the associated risks. Investors may obtain a free copy from the SEC’s website and from each company. For more information, please read the legends at the end of the press release we issued yesterday.

Thanks Nick, and good morning everyone. Before Carey takes us through our recent contract awards, and Jon gives us an overview of our financial results and outlook, I will discuss recent developments, including our planned merger with Rowan and provide some commentary on current market conditions.

Starting with an update of our planned combination with Rowan, we filed our preliminary merger proxy on Monday, October 29th. As is customary in these types of transactions, we are now waiting on feedback from the SEC and we’ll work with them to resolve any comments as we finalize the proxy. Additionally, we’ll be making customary filings in certain jurisdictions where we operate, including the US, UK, and Saudi Arabia, to satisfy regulatory requirements. Following the regulatory and court approvals, and Ensco and Rowan shareholder meetings to approve the transaction, we expect to close during the first half of 2019.

As we discussed on our conference call earlier this month, we are very excited about the merger with Rowan for several reasons. First, the combined company will be a premier offshore driller with greater geographic and customer diversity, a proven track record of safety and operational excellence, and the ability to continue investing in technology and innovation to differentiate our services and lower costs.

Second, we will have an industry-leading fleet of high-specification assets capable of operating across all water depths, with particular strength in the highest-specification seventh-generation drillships, as well as harsh environment and modern jackups where we are seeing higher levels of customer demand.

Third, the combined company will have an even stronger financial position with greater liquidity and improved access to the capital markets.

And finally, as a result of identified synergies from the transaction, the merger will create significant long-term value for shareholders. In short, the merger between Ensco and Rowan will better position the combined company to capitalize on opportunities and shareholders of both companies will benefit from a stronger franchise and even greater upside to improving market conditions as the industry recovery continues gaining momentum.

...Finally, I will provide some further detail on our planned merger with Rowan. As Carl mentioned earlier, we believe that this combination will create an industry-leading offshore driller and both companies’ shareholders will benefit from the transaction. As outlined in our merger announcement, we have identified annual run rate expense synergies of $150 million from the deal. This equates to approximately $1 billion in present value, representing significant value creation when compared with our current combined market capitalization. More than 75% of these synergies are expected to be captured within one year of closing, which would make the combination accretive to cash flow per share in 2020 assuming the transaction closes in the first half of 2019.

These annual expense savings are expected to be realized primarily from corporate and regional overlaps, supply chain efficiencies, as well as the standardization of systems, policies and procedures across the combined organization. We estimate that approximately 50% of targeted synergies will be recognized in contract drilling expense with the other half in G&A expense. While this combination is a merger rather than an acquisition, we feel very confident of achieving these synergy targets based on our recent experience from the Atwood acquisition and we'll provide updates on synergy realization on quarterly earnings calls following closing.

As of June 30th, the combined company would have had liquidity of approximately $3.9 billion, including $1.9 billion of cash and short-term investments as well as Ensco's undrawn $2 billion revolving credit facility. This liquidity will provide the combined entity with the financial flexibility to continue investing in the fleet and innovations aimed at improving drilling efficiencies for our customers. Further, we expect that increased geographic and customer diversification will result in greater access to the capital markets than either company would have had on a standalone basis, which will improve our competitiveness going forward.

In closing, the outlook for offshore drilling continues to improve as sustained higher commodity prices coupled with lower break-even costs make many offshore projects compelling investments for our customers. The recovery in the jackup segment is already well underway and we're beginning to see a broad-based improvement in all major shallow water regions. We're also beginning to see some of the increased customer activity for floaters translate into contract awards, and we anticipate that utilization for floaters will begin to increase in the latter part of 2019, particularly for the highest-specification assets that are most in demand.

The combined company's rig fleet will contain many of the industry's highest-specification assets and coupled with meaningful synergies will provide our shareholders with even greater upside to improving market conditions as the industry recovery continues gaining momentum. For these reasons, we are excited for the merger and look forward to closing the transaction in the first half of 2019.
