Item 8.01 Other Events.

On December 20, 2016, the Arizona Corporation Commission (“ACC”) completed its open meeting to consider a recommended decision by its administrative law judge in a proceeding concerning the value and cost of residential distributed generation (“DG”) solar installations. After making several amendments, the ACC approved the recommended decision by a 4-1 vote. As a result of the ACC’s action, effective following APS’ pending rate case, the current net metering tariff that governs payments for energy exported to the grid from rooftop solar systems will be replaced by a more formula-driven approach that will utilize inputs from historical wholesale solar power costs and eventually an avoided cost methodology.

As amended, the decision provides that payments by utilities for energy exported to the grid from DG solar facilities will be determined using a resource comparison proxy methodology, a method that is based on the price a utility has paid for utility-scale solar projects on a five year rolling average, while a forecasted avoided cost methodology is being developed. The price established by this resource comparison proxy method will be updated annually (between rate cases) but will not be decreased by more than 10% per year. Once the avoided cost methodology is developed, the ACC will determine in each utility’s subsequent rate cases which method (or a combination of methods) is appropriate to determine the actual price to be paid by that utility for exported distributed energy.

In addition, the ACC made the following determinations:

- Customers who have interconnected DG systems prior to a decision in APS' pending rate case will be grandfathered for a period of 20 years from the date of interconnection;
- Customers with DG solar systems are to be considered a separate class of customers for ratemaking purposes; and
- Once an export price is set for a utility, no netting or banking of retail credits will be available for new DG customers, and the then-applicable export price will be guaranteed for new customers for a period of 10 years.

This decision of the ACC addresses policy determinations only. Its principles will be applied in future rate cases, and the policy determinations themselves may be subject to future change as are all ACC policies. The determination of the initial export energy price to be paid by APS will be made in APS’ currently pending rate case, which is scheduled for hearing by the ACC in March 2017. APS cannot predict the outcome of this determination.

The ACC’s decision did not make any policy determinations as to any specific costs to be charged to DG solar system customers for their use of the grid. The determination of any such costs will be made in the utilities’ future rate cases.
