Employee FAQ

The purpose of this document is to provide answers to questions of LogMeIn employees. It will be updated whenever we have additional information.

---

Update as of 9/27/16

Leadership

How was the leadership team chosen?

- The senior leadership team of the combined company is the result of extensive discussions with members of the management and HR teams of both LogMeIn and GetGo, led by Bill Wagner, as well as consultations with an independent consultant.
- We believe this group is incredibly well suited to lead the combined company into its next chapter as it's made up of great, well respected leaders across both orgs who are already running – and growing – the businesses today.

If there's a leadership change in my organization, what does that mean for me?

- At this point, nothing new – final decisions on org structure and team make up won't come for some time.
- Additionally, until close, it's business as usual and LogMeIn and GetGo remain separate companies. Our respective senior management teams remain in place and both are focused on leading their individual functions and companies to a strong and successful finish to 2016.
- The combined company executive team announcement is just the first step in the process of defining the combined company
- You can expect a “best of both” approach will be taken to all teams, regardless of which company the leader comes from – i.e. you should expect virtually every team to include members of both GetGo and LMI
- As always, we have and will continue to value highly engaged, passionate employees

When will decisions be made on the next level of leaders and teams? How will these decisions be made?

- The combined company exec team announcement is the first step in the process to making broader team decisions – one that gives us the next level of detail necessary to more effectively execute on the specifics associated with the integration plan.
- The combined company team represents a best of both approach in people and in location – we will have great leaders from both LMI and GetGo and will have a bi-coastal, multi-location leadership team
- Individual team decisions will be made as part of the overall integration planning process and will be informed by both general strategy and org structure integration tracks, as well as functional integration tracks.
- Moving forward, we'll be bringing more people into the integration planning process – and it will be this process that helps to inform and make choices future org design decisions.
- As we've said previously, we will communicate decisions and information to the extent possible.

Will we have a chance to meet any new leaders from GetGo?

- We intend to make introductions as soon as possible, without disrupting the normal course of business.
- The combined company leadership team will be reaching their future direct reports in the coming days with the hopes of following that up – if/when possible – with in-person visits.
- The leaders may not meet everyone right away, but executives from both sides will try to meet as much of their new teams as soon as possible.

Does the naming of senior executives have impact on facilities or office locations?

- While facilities decisions have yet to be finalized, we expect the combined company to have far larger bases than current LMI structure – and these locations will be very cross-functional.
- In addition to our Boston headquarters (as announce previously), we are committed to having a strong presence in places like Southern and Northern California, and Budapest.
- We expect that upon close of the deal, our functional teams and leadership will be represented across many offices.
