LogMeIn said at market close on Tuesday that it plans to merge with Citrix's GoTo business, one of its largest competitors, in a tax-free deal valued at $1.8 billion. Once the proposed merger closes, expected in the first quarter of 2017, the combined company is projected to have annual revenue in excess of $1 billion with more than 2 million customers across the globe.

In after hours trading, LogMeIn's stock price was up more than 19 percent to $83.27 per share. The stock price for Citrix was slightly down to $88.96 per month.

LogMeIn CEO and President Bill Wagner would lead the combined company, which would be headquartered in Boston. The company said certain managers of the GoTo management team are expected to join once the merger is complete.

In a conference call with shareholders, Wagner said the merger “would bring meaningful scale to LogMeIn” and diversify its product portfolio, as well as allow it to “delivery greater innovation” and better opportunities for employees.

“We are extremely excited about this transformative merger and the profound benefits it will bring to our customers, our people and our shareholders,” Wagner said in a statement. “Both companies have passionate employees who are committed to developing easy-to-use software that simplifies the way we connect with people, devices, apps and products.”

When asked if there might be any consolidation between LogMeIn’s and GoTo’s products, Wagner said “there’s plenty of room” for products like LogMeIn’s join.me and GoToMeeting “to continue down similar but distinct paths.”

Wagner said it’s too early to say what kind of impact the merger would have on the combined company’s headcount. In the company’s announcement, the merger would allow it to achieve $65 million in cost savings for operations in its first year as a combined company and that would rise to $100 million the second year.

When asked if the merger would result in any layoffs, LogMeIn spokesman Craig VerColen told BostInno “we do expect the longer term synergies realized – one of the aspects of the deal – would be spread across a variety of items.”

“We do expect some overlap in roles that would be included in that, but the overall synergies goal includes a variety of other expected overlap, like marketing spend, redundant facilities, and G&A costs,” he added.

The proposed merger would be completed through a Reverse Morris Trust transaction in which Citrix has created a wholly owned subsidiary that holds the GoTo business called GetGo that would ultimately merge with LogMeIn. The use of a Reverse Morris Trust transaction means the deal would be tax-free to Citrix and its shareholders.

The value of the deal is based on 27.6 million LogMeIn plans to issue to Citrix shareholders and the company’s closing price of $65.31 as of July 25. This will result in Citrix shareholders owning 50.1 percent of the combined company’s outstanding shares and LogMeIn shareholders owning 49.9 percent. The deal is subject to regulatory and shareholder approvals.

This story will be updated.
