Dennis Polk, President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, SYNnex Corp.

...Now, on to the big news of the day: our announcement regarding the acquisition of Convergys. This is a very important transaction that will move Concentrix to a clear leadership position in the customer engagement BPO market. With Convergys, Concentrix will have the geographic scale and expertise to fulfill all aspects of customer experience service needs, especially in high value engagements. Equally impressive will be the combined customer list of the two organizations, spanning a multitude of the Fortune 1000 today to the disruptors who will be on this list in future years. We see many opportunities to sell deeper into the joint customer base.

In addition to the positive business aspects of the deal, the financial aspects are very good as well. The transaction will be immediately accretive in a first year post-close, moving to double-digits by year two. We believe the synergy benefits from this transaction will be achieved and hope to surpass them as we operate the two businesses. Lastly, we are pleased with the financing of this deal. Post-close, we will have the same day to day liquidity flexibility that we enjoy today.

...Now, moving on to the announcement of the acquisition of Convergys. We are very excited about Convergys joining the SYNnex Concentrix family. Convergys is a pioneer in our industry and fits the strategic need, bringing a very talented team which services a strong client base over a broad and complementary footprint.

We believe today's announcement provides a strong opportunity to drive growth by cross-selling within our joint client base, leveraging the incredible talent pool and being able to support many of our clients on a more robust geographical footprint. In fact, we will be adding 12 new countries, bringing our new total footprint to 40 countries around the world, servicing clients in 70 different languages.

Convergys clients foresee similar benefits with our presence in Asia-Pac, Middle East and Brazil. This is a unique set of assets we are adding for our portfolio and this greatly enhances our global leadership position. This transaction continues to also strengthen four of our strategic verticals, particularly banking and financial services, healthcare, technology and automotive. We add to our already strong portfolio of clients comprising of Fortune 1000 clients with high growth market disruptor companies. We are able to leverage our investments in [ph] RK, Chatbot, (00:19:19) and our recent Tigerspike enterprise mobility acquisition now across the much broader client base as we believe it will drive value add for our clients and take share.

This announcement also brings significant and immediate accretion to our financial profile. It is expected to increase our revenues by $2.7 billion adjusted EBITDA pre-synergies by approximately $330 million and accretive to non-GAAP EPS in the first year after close. We also anticipate significant cost synergies which we will realize over the first three years and approximately $50 million per year for a total of $150 million.

Cost savings will primarily come from delivery center alignment, rationalization of third-party spending and the leverage associated with our global infrastructure. Our primary focus is to ensure there is no disruption for our client and we look forward working with all of our new team members. We expect to close this transaction by the end of 2018 calendar year and expect the integrations to take up to 12 months after close which we will provide new updates on. We have talked to Concentrix – sorry, Convergys clients and joint clients with Concentrix and they are very excited about the deal and see growth opportunities available in front of us.

Question

Okay. Thanks and good afternoon. Right, a lot of information to digest. So, maybe I'll start with the synergies on the Convergys acquisition. Can you just maybe talk about how you arrived at those numbers because I look at it and your core business is approaching the double-digit operating margin for this year, so wouldn't think there is a lot of excess capacity to layer additional business in to so maybe talk about what you can do differently with this asset versus what they did as a public company and if there is any tie-ins to what you did with the IBM BPO acquisition historically, that would be helpful.

...So, first off, I mean, this is a joint exercise that we did with the Convergys senior executive teams to make sure that we were aligned both on those required to support the clients as well as what was a key to support the staff going through. And where we saw savings, frankly, were some central rationalizations where were literally located across the street from each other, where we have duplicate infrastructure around our networks and some of the other global infrastructure that we have.

And then in terms of our third-party spend are a fairly significant portion of the rationalization. And then frankly, by having a global footprint that's even enhanced by bringing the two organizations together, we also are able to lower our costs just by what we've been doing over the last 12 to 24 months by increasing our own operating income levels by on a larger scale.

Question

...And regarding the transaction that you announced. You said half of it was going to be in stock, the $2.4 billion and the half in cash. Could you give us some parameters around the cost to capital and what in interest rates might look like on that debt?

Marshall W. Witt , Chief Financial Officer, SYNnex Corp.

...From a very high level preliminary, we're thinking the cost to capital probably somewhere between [ph] $4.5 billion and $5 billion (00:26:54) and we plan to do what we've always done in the past which is look at the overall interest rate environment and do the right amount of [ph] specs (00:27:02) versus floating.

Question

...My first question is on the transaction. If you look at Convergys guidance, it looks like they have two large customers that are really impacting the revenue growth. So I'm curious after the transaction closes if you're going to have the same sort of exposure and if there's any significant customer overlap.

... So first off, we expect the two clients that they call out on their earnings call to continue to decline as sort of [ph] in-line (00:28:43) rates, with what they have publicly broadcast. But really when you put the whole company together, $4.7 billion, this only dilutes the impact to that and we believe that we can outgrow that decline. We also believe that bringing these services to those types of clients that are looking for new consumption of digital services and some of RPA and some of the [ph] AS (00:29:03) technology, we actually believe we can start to incubate some more growth in those particular clients.

There's not a significant client overlap in terms of revenue concentration and the client combination is actually extremely complementary. As we mentioned from the prepared marks, they bring a significant number of Fortune 1000 companies to the table as well as good market disruptors that have high growth and the management team have done a good job of growing those clients despite some headwinds from some of the two clients that they have called out the past.

Question

...Just with regards to Convergys, the $150 million, your next three years synergy or three years post-closing, the $50 million annually, are those all costs or are there revenue synergies in there as well? And if those are all cost and not revenue, just give you sort of -- give us a sense of what are some of the dynamics that need to occur to get the revenue synergies going? Thanks.

Christopher A. Caldwell , Executive Vice President & President-Concentrix Corporation, SYNEX Corp

... those are all costs, the $150 million straight out of the sort of SG&A. Frankly, we expect revenue synergies from this. As we have mentioned, they've got a client base that is looking to expand across a footprint that we can offer.

We similarly have a great client base just looking to expand across some of the places that they offer. And then combined, we have almost 6,000 – about a little over 6,000 sort of highly credentialed individuals that know RPAs, that know Six Sigma, that know a degree in analytics. They are really driving a lot of value across the combined client base. On top of that, we also have our Tigerspike business as well. So, frankly, we expect a lot of potential in the cross-selling and upselling in the client base and helping really future proof our clients as they go forward supporting our customer base.

Question

Hey, Chris, with that, would you expect those to begin to occur relatively immediately upon close?

Christopher A. Caldwell , Executive Vice President & President-Concentrix Corporation, SYNEX Corp

So, as always in this business, it takes a while to kind of building those cross-sell opportunities because we are literally changing how some of our clients operate in order to achieve those. But we do expect them to start to impact within a couple of quarters after close.

Question

Wanted to kind of ask a little bit more kind of a strategic question as this fits in with SYNEX, the acquisition, why make this acquisition now and how did the two cultures come together?

Dennis Polk , President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, SYNEX Corp.

Hi. This is Dennis. So I'll start with the first part and then Chris can talk about the culture side. Why make this acquisition now? It's opportunity that presented itself. And when we looked at our overall business and where we wanted to take the Concentrix business, our initial plan was to do smaller tuck-in type acquisitions. But when the Convergys asset came to the table, we saw a way to immediately get to where we wanted to go with the business. For all the reasons that Chris talked about and I talked about in our prepared remarks, it made sense to invest in this business. And as far as the culture side, I'll turn it over to Chris.

...I mean, from a culture perspective, both organizations are extremely focused around execution to the clients. That was some of the resounding message coming out of both the joint calls as well as the Convergys calls prior to proposing the deal. And really when the focus is on the clients and focus on the people, the cultures will match and grow and we spent a lot of time with the senior executive team of Convergys to know that we're aligned and how we see the market, how we see the changes in the market and how we both feel that can grow within the market.

Question

...Can you give us an idea of the industry exposure of the Concentrix side with the Convergys assets included? It's going to – broadly how much telecom exposure or how much financial services exposure, et cetera?

...we are going to come and put that out. There is some sort of non-public information that well, what's getting the public domain [indiscernible] (00:37:35). Overall, there are roughly increases our share in financial services, increases our share in healthcare. It keeps about the same consumer electronics, increases our share in automotive, and on the consolidated business, it decreases our concentration in telecom pretty significantly.

Question

Okay. And do you expect any integration costs that you could call out and then lastly, just talk about the pricing environment on the Technology Solutions side? Thanks.

Christopher A. Caldwell , Executive Vice President & President-Concentrix Corporation, SYNnex Corp.

So, in terms of the costs ... we'll continue to keep the public notified as we go through our calls with where we are at. But generally, what we see is about $1 for every savings. There's about $1 of one-time costs that are associated with those savings. And so through the next three years, we expect that be around $150 million.

Question

Thank you very much. Can you comment a little bit about the process for the acquisition? Is it a full-blown bidding process? Was it privately negotiated and then are there stops or breakups in place should something occur whether it be governments or another bidder coming in to protect the entities?

Dennis Polk , President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, SYNnex Corp.

...I'll go in reverse order. There are standard closing conditions that occur in a transaction like this, primarily around HSR in the U.S. and in other countries with similar laws. And then each set of shareholders has to vote on this transaction. So that is also an aspect of the sale process. But all of that is typical and normal in a transaction like this and we expect things to process in an orderly fashion.

As far as the process that was run, that's really a question for the Convergys management team. But we can't say that we believe there were multiple parties bidding for this asset.

Question

So, just some more Convergys questions I suppose for someone that hasn't covered it before. Obviously, it looks like there are revenue in margins from the last three years have been flat to down. Maybe help us with the due diligence you did on that and obviously, the prior question about the two customers that are decreasing could mention why and then what's the comfort level, I guess, with the rest of the customer base?

Christopher A. Caldwell , Executive Vice President & President-Concentrix Corporation, SYNnex Corp.

...I mean, the declining customer is very, very targeted to the talk of segmentation and well-documented in the Convergys public call and public report. The Convergys team have done a very good job of sort of growing other business. They just haven't been able to outrun some of the decline within the telecom sector and that's primarily focused around a large movement by two of their clients to move work offshore where they kept the work but just the dollar diminishes as it moves from an onshore model to an offshore model. So, doing that due diligence first has we got very comfortable with the dynamics of the business, where they're growing their market, the clients that they are attracting and how we can continue to help that grow and certainly grow the combined business.

Question

Okay. One of the things that you mentioned obviously is EPS accretion of mid single-digits in the first year and double-digits in the second year and I assume you're referring to the current run rate EPS level. Correct?

Dennis Polk, President , Chief Executive Officer & Director, SYNnex Corp.

Yes. That's correct on a pro forma basis.

Question

Okay. Now, one of the concerns, I guess, about -- Chris, we've talked about before and it sounds like you guys are managing it pretty well. It was just with automation coming in, the concern is that the revenue trajectory of the call centers would be down and even though possibly the margin on the business that is converted over with the RPA automation could be better, but still the net operating margin down -- dollars could be down. So, just give us, I guess, one more current refresh on both SYNnex and then Convergys's situation with that, please?

Christopher A. Caldwell , Executive Vice President & President-Concentrix Corporation, SYNnex Corp.

...With the Convergys business, I mean, they similarly are doing similar things. I think together, we can speed it up. I think together, we can actually drive some of those changes a lot faster within the client base. And where we see it really taking traction is we actually are growing net revenue because we are taking more share from our competitors within those existing clients where we might share a client with other competitors.

Question

Okay. Last one. Thanks for taking my questions. Obviously, this would take you out on the Convergys side at M&A for quite a while of what you integrated [indiscernible] (00:45:03) I would assume. How about on the TS side? Would a deal like this take you out of, I guess, anything other than sort of a small tuck-in? It's just the M&A strategy, I guess, on the other half of the business? Thank you.

Dennis Polk , President, Chief Executive Officer & Director, SYNnex Corp.

...As far as the TS side of the business is concerned, as we talked about or I talked about in my script, Marshall and his team did an excellent job in financing this transaction and leaves us in a very good liquidity position. So should an opportunity come up on the TS side, we're not precluded from doing it because of this transaction.
